Gregory— Plumb is a professor and chair of the department of cartography and geography at East Central University and the author of A Waterfall Lover's Guide to the Pacific Northwest. He lives in Johnson City, Tennessee.

The author describes the waterfalls and the hike to them well. However, he doesn't give any landmarks so that you can find them. For instance Twin Falls, it's on the highland rim somewhere. Many of the authors now give gps coordinates or at least better directions so you have a better idea where to start looking. Take a look at Melissa Watson's books to see what I mean.

What a great guide book! My family and I have used it to locate water falls in the Smoky Mountains. The directions are easy to follow the descriptions of the falls well written and accurate.

Really great guide book. Cant wait to visit Tennessee using this book to find these awesome waterfalls!

tried to find a couple waterfalls but the directions were not correct. had to get directions from local businesses.

Very helpful and informative!

Could have used better directions to get to the falls. Once you were in the local area, then directions were fine. Loved all the falls that the book showed.

Good guide, maps and pertinent information, helped me find these hidden natural gems. Ratings help decide where and when to go, what to expect.

Great book!
